There is a market that springs up out of nowhere every Sunday at the end of my lane. Six days of the week, there's just an open ground; but come Sunday morning, and it is transformed into a hustling, bustling, mini-city. Tents and pens came up overnight. I wake up to the bleating of goats and the mooing of cows. Not to mention the incessant chatter of chickens chittering everywhere. Walking down the street, a thousand scents assail me; fragrance of earth, fresh vegetables, crushed greens etc. My mouth starts watering to see the freshest salson. Colourful vegetables like potatoes, brinjal, tomatoes are feast for eyes also. A few naughty children run away with some tomatoes; and the vendor runs after them, calling them monkeys. Some vendors are accompanied by their families, who help them. A few customers can be seen bargaining with vendors over prices of chillies and lemons even. Suddenly, people scatter and shriek as a cow comes running through the makeshift shops. A market place is so lively to visit.

- On which day of the week is the market set up?
 - To which sounds does the narrator wake up?
 - What makes the narrator's mouth water?
 - Why do the vendors call the children 'monkeys'?
 - Why do people suddenly scatter and shriek?
